For me, the takeaways from Adream Career Planning Curriculum are invaluable. First of all, I have achieved a next level of understanding towards myself - interests, personality, and skillsets; secondly, it is also an opportunity for me to learn proper and systematic career planning, which is a brand-new experience. Therefore, it allows me to appreciate the students from other perspectives apart from traditional curriculums that merely emphasize scores. It helps me navigate through each surface, and gain a deeper understanding of what makes my students unique and different. They are definitely much better than I originally thought.

The biggest challenge of this course is: though the design seems straightforward, in fact, it is comprehensive. You need to make a lot more preparations in advance, and equip yourself with professional knowledge, and I take it as a great motivation to continue study on career exploration and human resource management in order to deliver accurate and inspirational classes to my students.

In the past semester, I chose the second lesson of the "Career Planning" module for my students - the career rainbow chart. Before this lesson, I was at a loss about my own career, not to mention deliver successful career exploration skills and knowledge for my students. I studied very hard on most of the learning materials in the "Career Planning" lessons, learned about Schuber's career rainbow map, and reached a deeper understanding of how the career rainbow map navigates my life. With this wonderful tool, I understood the roles and responsibilities that I should play at all stages of my life, and I am more determined that I am on a right path. The students also benefited from having a taste of mapping out their lives, found their missions at each stage, and therefore they dare to dream bigger and exciting plans for their future. I am sure they will have a much better starting for career planning.
