Repositioning and Renaming: Credit Suisse (Lux) Sustainable Bond Fund

- Date of changes: June 1, 2017
- New name: Credit Suisse (Lux) Green Bond Fund
- The focus is now on environmental sustainability and on investments in green bonds
- Benefits:
 - Green bonds make a direct contribution to protecting the environment and the climate
 - Potential for higher returns, since the fund can now invest globally (including in emerging markets)
- Reference currency changes from EUR to USD
- However, the currency exposure remains the same for the share classes:
 - The fund's USD exposure will be hedged for the EUR share classes
 - The USD share class will in the future have a direct USD exposure (existing hedging of EUR exposure will no longer apply)
- Benchmark changes from an index for EUR bonds to a global green bond index
- New fund manager: Dominik Scheck (since March 1, 2017)

Climate change is manifesting itself ever more clearly. Global warming is now one of the biggest challenges that humanity faces. Therefore, many investors increasingly wish to connect their financial interests – generating an attractive capital market return – with making a direct contribution to protecting the environment and the climate. The fund is therefore being positioned as a “green” fund and the name is being changed accordingly.

What will change?

The fund will invest in future in green bonds, i.e., in bonds that can only be used to finance environmental and climate protection projects. The green bonds investment segment is expanding rapidly. However, for reasons of diversification and liquidity, up to one-third of assets may be invested in bonds that, though not classified as green bonds, nevertheless meet the Credit Suisse sustainability standard – generally recognized environmental, social and governance-related sustainability criteria. The aim, as the market widens, is for the fund to invest up to 100% of its assets in green bonds in the next 12 to 24 months.

Other changes

- Global investment universe: Until now the fund has invested primarily in EUR bonds; from now on investments can be made globally (including in emerging markets).
- Potential for higher returns, slightly higher investment risk in general: A number of capital markets offer more attractive returns than EUR bonds. Therefore, the repositioned fund is likely to achieve a higher return than before. The investments will continue to have an investment-grade rating on average (minimum rating: BBB–). However, since the fund can also invest in bonds from emerging markets, the investment risk is likely to rise slightly in general.
- Reference currency of the fund: Because of the wider investment universe, the reference currency will be changed from EUR to USD.
- Benchmark: The JPM GBI EMU Investment Grade Traded will be replaced by the Bloomberg Barclays MSCI Green Bond Index.
