Credit Suisse is pleased to announce a series of strategic growth initiatives in alliances with premier industry partners that will enable the Bank to grow its world-leading Alternative Investments franchise.

With the announcement of several new initiatives and the addition of a new founding partner to its Global Infrastructure Partners joint venture with General Electric, Credit Suisse has effectively expanded its Alternative Investments group and offerings across a variety of new products, sectors and regions.

Brian Finn, head of Alternative Investments for Credit Suisse, noted: “Credit Suisse already has a market leadership position in alternative investments, with over USD 125 billion in assets under management. We have in recent months embarked on a strategy of further expanding this alternatives franchise by seeking partners with investment expertise in a variety of different asset classes and investment styles in order to expand our product offering. Each of these strategic partnerships represents a unique, synergistic combination, with both Credit Suisse and the partner bringing capabilities to the table that will result in increased opportunities for our clients.”

“We have recently entered into strategic relationships in the areas of global infrastructure with a focus on emerging markets; commodities and related basic industries; alternative, “clean” energy; and private equity in the People’s Republic of China and Latin America - and we plan on announcing further initiatives in the future,” Mr. Finn said. “As investors increasingly look to a much broader range of investment opportunities which require more specialized expertise, we are seeking to partner with best in class providers who can benefit from our own access to investment ideas, deal flows, client relationships and distribution.”

The initiatives announced today include a broad strategic alliance with and investment in Ospraie Management, led by Dwight Anderson. This relationship will allow Credit Suisse to expand its presence in the management of investments in commodities and basic industries with a world-class partner.
Credit Suisse also announced recently a new investment partnership with the Abu Dhabi Future Energy Company ("ADFEC") in which Credit Suisse, along with ADFEC and other partners, will commit capital to projects and funds focused on alternative energy investments. This partnership is further evidence of Credit Suisse’s long-standing commitment to the Middle East and builds on Credit Suisse’s leading expertise in the energy sector.

Credit Suisse had previously announced a partnership in May 2006 with GE for investments in infrastructure that will initially be funded with over $1 billion. Today, Global Infrastructure Partners announced the appointment of Bill Woodburn, former President and CEO of GE Infrastructure, who will join Adebayo "Bayo" Ogunlesi, Jonathan Bram, Matthew Harris and Michael McGhee as a senior founding Partner of the joint venture.

In addition, Credit Suisse also announced certain geographic initiatives to expand its regional alternative investment focus. Specifically, Credit Suisse is teaming up with China Renaissance Capital Investment (CRCI), led by Mark Qiu, to form a China venture business, to invest in smaller, developing companies. This follows from last year's joint venture between Credit Suisse and CRCI that formed a China growth capital fund, which is now one of the biggest funds dedicated to larger Private Equity deals in greater China.

Credit Suisse also announced the formation of a strategic alliance with a team of leading Latin American professionals and the Bank’s own team to focus on private equity investment opportunities in Latin America.
