Performance/exposure update

General comments¹

- European equities had one of their worst starts to the market year in decades with major equity indices down -15% intra-month. China and the decline in the price of oil to record lows spurred recession fears among investors. In Europe, a looming banking crisis in Italy related to the negotiations for the set-up of a bad bank created doubts about the economic recovery in the periphery. The Bank of Japan's decision to introduce negative interest rates helped stock markets to regain some lost ground towards the end of the month.
- The strategy was down -5.58% due to three reasons: 1) Long bias. 2) Weak long conviction book. 3) Resilient MDAX Index on the short side, whose future we are structurally short. For point 3) please refer to page 3.
- Conviction book: Morphosys (-23.99%) came under pressure despite the announcement of a clinical milestone for the start of a Phase 2 trial with Bayer. The investment case is solid and the current sell-off is related to a general investor aversion to biotech and to uncertainty stemming from the presidential election in the US. Rocket Internet (-29.18%) is polarising and the absence of newsflow coupled with bubble fears weighed on the stock. In our view, the stock is undervalued. The current market cap takes into account only cash and puts a value tag only to Hello Fresh. The remaining platform is valued at zero, which we deem to be an exaggeration. We are maintaining the position.
- Outlook: Please refer to the next page.

Year-to-date performance update

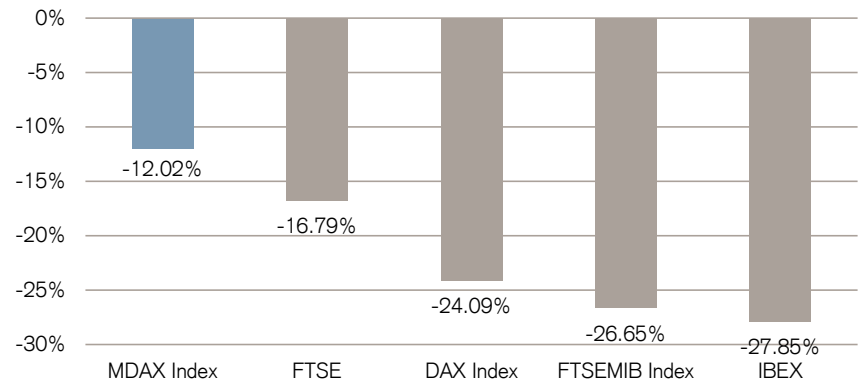

Contribution analysis

- The fund is structurally short the MDAX index by construction since inception of the strategy in 2007. As the charts show, last year and in the recent months this index proved to be quite resilient if compared to other major European equity markets. The differences are significant. This explains why in certain months the hedge through the future was not always optimal and explains also our rather low contribution from the short book of +2.78% in January.
- These periods can occur occasionally but markets tend to realign. There is further room for the MDAX to drop in case of continuing weak markets. In case of a rebound, the MDAX could have a smaller upside than other markets.
- Outlook: Economic indicators point to a largely resilient economy in the developed world. Exports are a drag but domestic demand is upbeat due to cheap oil. In Europe, the economic recovery in the periphery is firm and monetary policy remains supportive. At these levels European equities are attractive trading at around 12.8 times 1 year forward earnings and offering a dividend yield of above 4%. Risk aversion is high at the moment. The combination of low valuation and the expectation of further QE from the ECB in March leads us to stay net long. However, a chain reaction in emerging markets that surpasses trade weakness and rattles markets could force us to change opinion and temporarily hedge the portfolio.

New position among our top 3 long positions – Wirecard replaces Rocket Internet

Wirecard - long

- Europe's leading independent provider of outsourcing and white label solutions for electronic payment transactions. The company provides software and systems for online payment, electronic funds transfer, fraud protection and enterprise solutions.
- Wirecard's centralised international payments platform, combined with its banking services, put it in a promising position to capture larger customers. Its average transaction volume per merchant has doubled over the last five years.
- Successful M&A execution to expand its international footprint, mainly in Asia. A quarter of transaction are generated outside Europe.
- Mobile payment initiatives are becoming an increasingly important segment in the payments markets since the introduction of numerous wallet initiatives and the growth of m-commerce.
- Wirecard was one of the first companies to invest heavily in this space and as such has an advanced offering of solutions with leading-edge technology.
- Solid cash position, which could be used to further internationalise the business. The company is not present in the Americas. Growth in cross-border transactions and the potential to cross-sell help mitigate pricing pressures and should preserve Wirecard's margin profile.

Our top three stories (long book)

	Morphosys	Rib Software	Rocket Internet
Company/story description	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Biotechnology company. Story based on the development of human antibodies and medicines tailored to treat specific diseases (e.g. cancer, inflammation). The company announced positive safety and tolerability studies for a number of its developed antibodies (e.g. anti-arthritis rheumatoid MOR103 and anti-tumor MOR208). Drug development business model based on proprietary technologies and a very broad partnered pipeline offering the company a lower risk profile than most of its biotech peers. Strong balance sheet backed by a comfortable cash position. 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Long-established developer and vendor of project management software to the construction sector. It has developed a genuine iTwo 5D software solution that enables customers to manage not only design (3D) but also time (4D) and more complex, dynamic picture costs (5D). It bridges the gap between computer-aided design and enterprise resource planning, allowing customers to save up to 30% of project costs. Development of a iTwo 5D cloud-solution, international expansion, tight collaboration with top construction companies. 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Global internet platform present in 100 countries. Aims to become market leader in its field outside China and USA. Focus on launching proven online businesses in the fields e-commerce, services and financial technology in underpenetrated territories on an industrial scale by leveraging the efficiency of its business development engine. Promising online reference market in emerging markets. Strong execution track record in terms of launched/sold companies (average 39x multiple on invested cash). Solid cash position (EUR 2.2bn).
